Criminal law --- Illegal drugs — Offences — Possession for purpose of trafficking — Narcotic Control Act [repealed]

Reverse onus provisions — Under s. 8 of Act, if accused found to be in possession of narcotic, accused presumed to be in possession for purpose of trafficking unless accused able to establish otherwise — Right to be presumed innocent as guaranteed by s. 11(d) of Charter rendering reverse onus in s. 8 of Act inoperative.

Criminal law --- Charter of Rights and Freedoms — Principles of interpretation

Although there are important lessons to be learned from Bill of Rights jurisprudence, it does not constitute binding authority in relation to the constitutional interpretation of the Charter — The Charter, as a constitutional document, is fundamentally different from the statutory Bill of Rights, which was interpreted as simply recognizing and declaring existing rights.

Criminal law --- Charter of Rights and Freedoms — Demonstrably justified reasonable limit [Oakes test] [s. 1]

The onus of proving that a limit on a right or freedom guaranteed by the Charter is reasonable and demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society rests upon the party seeking to uphold the limitation. It is clear from the text of s. 1 that limits on the rights and freedoms enumerated in the Charter are exceptions to their general guarantee — The presumption is that the rights and freedoms are guaranteed unless the party invoking s. 1 can bring itself within the exceptional criteria which justify their being limited — The standard of proof under s. 1 is the civil standard, namely, proof by a preponderance of probability — The alternative criminal standard, proof beyond a reasonable doubt, would be unduly onerous on the party seeking to limit — To establish that a limit is reasonable and demonstrably justified, two central criteria must be satisfied. First, the objective, which the measures responsible for a limit on a Charter right or freedom are designed to serve, must be of sufficient importance to warrant overriding a constitutionally protected right or freedom — Second, once a sufficiently significant objective is recognized, the party invoking s. 1 must show that the means chosen are reasonable and demonstrably justified — The means must be rationally connected to the objective in question and should impair as little as possible the right or freedom in question — Furthermore, there must be proportion between the effects of the measures which are responsible for limiting the Charter right or freedom and the objective Constitution Act, 1982, s 1.

Criminal law --- Charter of Rights and Freedoms — Presumption of innocence [s. 11(d)] — Presumptions

Accused charged with possession of narcotic for purpose of trafficking — Under s. 8 of Narcotic Control Act, if accused found to be in possession of narcotic, accused presumed to be in possession for purpose of trafficking unless accused able to establish otherwise — Accused bringing motion to challenge constitutional validity of s. 8 of Act on basis of presumption of innocence in s. 11\(d\) of Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms — Trial Judge holding that s. 8 of Act invalid — Court of Appeal dismissing Crown's appeal — Crown's appeal to Supreme Court of Canada dismissed — Reverse onus provision in s. 8 of Act offending right to be presumed innocent — Section 8 of Act not reasonable limit on that right pursuant to s. 1 of Charter — Reverse onus in s. 8 of Act not rationally related to objective of curbing drug trafficking — Possession of very small quantity of narcotics not supporting inference of trafficking — Section 8 of Act containing overinclusive presumption Constitution Act, 1982, s 11(d).

Constitutional law --- Charter of Rights and Freedoms — General principles of interpretation

Although there are important lessons to be learned from Bill of Rights jurisprudence, it does not constitute binding authority in relation to the constitutional interpretation of the Charter — The Charter, as a constitutional document, is fundamentally different from the statutory Bill of Rights, which was interpreted as simply recognizing and declaring existing rights.

The accused was charged with unlawful possession of a narcotic for the purposes of trafficking, contrary to s. 4(2) of the Narcotic Control Act. After the trial judge had found that there had been proof beyond a reasonable doubt of possession, the accused brought a motion to challenge the constitutional validity of s. 8, which provides that, if the court finds the accused in possession of a narcotic, the accused is presumed to be in possession for the purpose of trafficking unless he establishes that he had no intent to traffic. The trial judge ruled that s. 8 was inoperative because it violated the presumption of innocence in s. 11\(d\) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and convicted the accused only of unlawful possession. This was confirmed on a Crown appeal by the Ontario Court of Appeal, which held that the reason for the unconstitutionality was the lack of a rational connection between the proved fact (possession) and the presumed fact (an intention to traffic). The Crown appealed.

Appeal dismissed.

Per Dickson C.J.C. (Chouinard, Lamer, Wilson and Le Dain JJ. concurring)

The presumption of innocence lies at the very heart of the criminal law and is protected expressly by s. 11(d), but is also integral to the general protection of life, liberty and security of the person in s. 7. The presumption of innocence has enjoyed long-standing recognition at common law and in major international human rights documents. The right to be presumed innocent until proven guilty requires, at a minimum, that an individual be proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, that the state bear the burden of proof and that criminal prosecutions be carried out in accordance with lawful procedures and fairness. A provision which requires an accused to disprove on a balance of probabilities the existence of a presumed fact which is an important element of the offence violates the presumption of innocence in s.11(d). Here, s. 8 infringed s. 11(d) in requiring the accused to prove no purpose of trafficking once the basic fact of possession is proven.

The rational connection test of whether there is a rational connection between the basic fact and the presumed fact is not appropriate in considering whether s. 11(d) has been violated. A basic fact may rationally tend to prove a presumed fact, but not prove its existence beyond a reasonable doubt. An accused could thereby be convicted despite the presence of a reasonable doubt. This would violate the presumption of innocence. The appropriate stage for invoking the rational connection test was under s. 1. It was vital to keep s. 1 and s. 11(d) analytically distinct.

Section 1 has two functions: it guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in the provisions which follow it; and it states explicitly the exclusive justificatory criteria (outside of s. 33) against which limitations on those rights and freedoms may be measured. The onus of proving that a limitation on any Charter right is reasonable and demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society rests upon the party seeking to uphold the limitation. The standard of proof is a preponderance of probabilities.

Two central criteria must be satisfied to establish that a limit is reasonable and demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society. First, the objective to be served by the measures limiting a Charter right must be sufficiently important to warrant overriding a constitutionally-protected right or freedom. The standard must be high to ensure that trivial objectives or those discordant with the principles of a free and democratic society do not gain protection. At a minimum, an objective must relate to societal concerns which are pressing and substantial in a free and democratic society before it can be characterized as sufficiently important. Second, the party invoking s. 1 must show the means to be reasonable and demonstrably justified. This involves a form of proportionality test involving three important components. To begin with, the measures must be fair and not arbitrary, carefully designed to achieve the objective in question, and rationally connected to that objective. In addition, the means should impair the right in question as little as possible. Lastly, there must be a proportionality between the effects of the limiting measure and the objective — the more severe the deleterious effects of a measure, the more important the objective must be.

Parliament's concern with decreasing drug trafficking was substantial and pressing. Its objective of protecting society from the grave ills of drug trafficking was self-evident, for the purposes of s. 1, and could potentially in certain cases warrant the overriding of a constitutionally-protected right. There was, however, no rational connection between the basic fact of possession and the presumed fact of possession for the purpose of trafficking. The possession of a small or negligible quantity of narcotics would not support the inference of trafficking.

Per Estey J. (McIntyre J. concurring)

The reasons of Dickson C.J.C. were adopted with respect to the relationship between s. 11(d) and s. 1 of the Charter, but the reasons of Martin J.A. in the court below for the disposition of all other issues.

Words and phrases considered:

FREE AND DEMOCRATIC SOCIETY

. . . Canadian society is to be free and democratic. The Court must be guided by the values and principles essential to a free and democratic society [Charter, s. 1] which I believe embody, to name but a few, respect for the inherent dignity of the human person, commitment to social justice and equality, accommodation of a wide variety of beliefs, respect for cultural and group identity, and faith in social and political institutions which enhance the participation of individuals and groups in society. The underlying values and principles of a free and democratic society are the genesis of the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Charter and the ultimate standard against which a limit on a right or freedom must be shown, despite its effect, to be reasonable and demonstrably justified.

MANDATORY PRESUMPTION

A mandatory presumption requires that the inference be made.

PERMISSIVE PRESUMPTION

A permissive presumption leave it optional as to whether the inference of the presumed fact is drawn following proof of the basic fact.

PRESUMPTION OF INNOCENCE

On the meaning of s. 11(d) of the [Charter], Stevenson J.A., writing for the majority [in R. v. Stanger (1983), 6 C.R.R. 257 (Alta. C.A.)], paraphrased Martin J.A.'s comment in R. v. Oakes (1983), [3 C.R.R. 289 (Ont. C.A.)] and stated at p. 266 C.R.R. . . . that the presumption of innocence meant "first, that an accused is innocent until proven guilty in accordance with established procedure, and secondly, that guilt must be proven beyond a reasonable doubt." Mr Justice Stevenson also cited Macdonald J.'s comment in [R. v. Carrol (1983), 10 C.R.R. 202 at 208 (P.E.I. C.A.)] that the presumption of innocence is maintained "as long as the prosecution has the final burden of establishing guilt, on any element of the offence charged, beyond a reasonable doubt" . . .

PRESUMPTION WITHOUT BASIC FACTS

Presumptions can be classified into two general categories: presumptions without basic facts and presumptions with basic facts. A presumption without a basic fact is simply a conclusion that is to be drawn until the contrary is proved. A presumption with a basic fact entails a conclusion to be drawn upon proof of the basic fact (see Cross On Evidence, 5th ed., at pp. 122-23).

PRESUMPTIONS OF LAW

. . . presumptions are often referred to as either presumptions of law or presumptions of fact. The latter entail "frequently recurring examples of circumstantial evidence" (Cross on Evidence, at p. 124) while the former involve actual legal rules.

TO ESTABLISH

As Ritchie J. found in [R. v. Appleby, [1972] S.C.R. 303] (though addressing a different statutory provision), the phrase "to establish" [in s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. N-1] is the equivalent of "to prove". The Legislature, by using the word "establish" in s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act, intended to impose a legal burden on the accused.

Dickson C.J.C. (Chouinard, Lamer, Wilson and Le Dain JJ. concurring):

1 This appeal [from 40 O.R. (2d) 660, 32 C.R. (3d) 193, 2 C.C.C. (3d) 339, 145 D.L.R. (3d) 123, affirming 38 O.R. (2d) 598] concerns the constitutionality of s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. N-1. The section provides, in brief, that if the court finds the accused in possession of a narcotic he is presumed to be in possession for the purpose of trafficking. Unless the accused can establish the contrary, he must be convicted of trafficking. The Ontario Court of Appeal held that this provision constitutes a "reverse onus" clause and is unconstitutional because it violates one of the core values of our criminal justice system, the presumption of innocence, now entrenched in s.11(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The Crown has appealed.

I. Statutory and Constitutional Provisions

2 Before reviewing the factual context, I will set out the relevant legislative and constitutional provisions:

Narcotic Control Act

3. (1) Except as authorized by this Act or the regulations, no person shall have a narcotic in his possession.

(2) Every person who violates subsection (1) is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable

(a) upon summary conviction for a first offence, to a fine of one thousand dollars or to imprisonment for six months or to both fine and imprisonment, and for a subsequent offence, to a fine of two thousand dollars or to imprisonment for one year or to both fine and imprisonment; or

(b) upon conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for seven years.

4. (1) No person shall traffic in a narcotic or any substance represented or held out by him to be a narcotic.

(2) No person shall have in his possession a narcotic for the purpose of trafficking.

(3) Every person who violates subsection (1) or (2) is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for life ...

8. In any prosecution for a violation of subsection 4(2), if the accused does not plead guilty, the trial shall proceed as if it were a prosecution for an offence under section 3, and after the close of the case for the prosecution and after the accused has had an opportunity to make full answer and defence, the court shall make a finding as to whether or not the accused was in possession of the narcotic contrary to section 3; if the court finds that the accused was not in possession of the narcotic contrary to section 3, he shall be acquitted but if the court finds that the accused was in possession of the narcotic contrary to section 3, he shall be given an opportunity of establishing that he was not in possession of the narcotic for the purpose of trafficking, and thereafter the prosecutor shall be given an opportunity of adducing evidence to establish that the accused was in possession of the narcotic for the purpose of trafficking; if the accused establishes that he was not in possession of the narcotic for the purpose of trafficking, he shall be acquitted of the offence as charged but he shall be convicted of an offence under section 3 and sentenced accordingly; and if the accused fails to establish that he was not in possession of the narcotic for the purpose of trafficking, he shall be convicted of the offence as charged and sentenced accordingly. [The italics are mine.]

Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms

11. Any person charged with an offence has the right ...

(d) to be presumed innocent until proven guilty according to law in a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal ...

1. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in it subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

II. Facts

5 The respondent, David Edwin Oakes, was charged with unlawful possession of a narcotic for the purpose of trafficking, contrary to s. 4(2) of the Narcotic Control Act. He elected trial by magistrate without a jury. At trial, the Crown adduced evidence to establish that Mr. Oakes was found in possession of eight 1-gram vials of cannabis resin in the form of hashish oil. Upon a further search conducted at the police station, $619.45 was located. Mr. Oakes told the police that he had bought ten vials of hashish oil for $150 for his own use, and that the $619.45 was from a workers' compensation cheque. He elected not to call evidence as to possession of the narcotic. Pursuant to the procedural provisions of s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act, the trial judge proceeded to make a finding that it was beyond a reasonable doubt that Mr. Oakes was in possession of the narcotic.

6 Following this finding, Mr. Oakes brought a motion to challenge the constitutional validity of s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act, which he maintained imposes a burden on an accused to prove that he or she was not in possession for the purpose of trafficking. He argued that s. 8 violates the presumption of innocence contained in s. 11(d) of the Charter.

III. Judgments

(a) Ontario Provincial Court

7 At trial, Walker Prov. J. borrowed the words of Laskin C.J.C. in R. v. Shelley, [1981] 2 S.C.R. 196 at 202, 21 C.R. (3d) 354, 26 C.R. (3d) 150, [1981] 5 W.W.R. 481, 3 C.E.R. 217, 59 C.C.C. (2d) 292, 123 D.L.R. (3d) 748, 9 Sask. R. 338, 37 N.R. 320, and found that there was no rational or necessary connection between the fact proved, i.e., possession of the drug, and the conclusion asked to be drawn, namely, possession for the purpose of trafficking. Walker Prov. J. held that, to the extent that s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act requires this presumption and the resultant conviction, it is inoperative as a violation of the presumption of innocence contained in s. 11(d) of the Charter.

8 Walker Prov. J. added that the reverse onus in s. 8 would not be invalid if the Crown had adduced evidence of possession as well as evidence from which it could be inferred beyond a reasonable doubt that the possession was for the purpose of trafficking. If this were done, there would be a sufficient rational connection between the fact of possession and the presumed fact of trafficking.

(b) Ontario Court of Appeal

9 Martin J.A., writing for a unanimous court, dismissed the appeal and held the reverse onus provision in s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act unconstitutional.

10 Martin J.A. stated that, as a general rule, a reverse onus clause which places a burden on the accused to disprove on a balance of probabilities an essential element of an offence contravenes the right to be presumed innocent. Nevertheless, he held that some reverse onus provisions may be constitutionally valid provided they constitute reasonable limitations on the right to be presumed innocent and are demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

11 To determine whether a particular reverse onus provision is legitimate, Martin J.A. outlined a two-pronged inquiry. First, it is necessary to pass a threshold test, which he explained as follows, at p. 146:

The threshold question in determining the legitimacy of a particular reverse onus provision is whether the reverse onus clause is justifiable in the sense that it is reasonable for Parliament to place the burden of proof on the accused in relation to an ingredient of the offence in question. In determining the threshold question consideration should be given to a number of factors, including such factors as: (a) the magnitude of the evil sought to be suppressed, which may be measured by the gravity of the harm resulting from the offence or by the frequency of the occurrence of the offence or by both criteria; (b) the difficulty of the prosecution making proof of the presumed fact, and (c) the relative ease with which the accused may prove or disprove the presumed fact. Manifestly, a reverse onus provision placing the burden of proof on the accused with respect to a fact which it is not rationally open to him to prove or disprove cannot be justified.

12 If the reverse onus provision meets these criteria, due regard having been given to Parliament's assessment of the need for the provision, a second test must then be satisfied. This second test was described by Martin J.A. as the "rational connection test". According to it, to be reasonable, the proven fact (e.g., possession) must rationally tend to prove the presumed fact (e.g., an intention to traffic). In other words, the proven fact must raise a probability that the presumed fact exists.

13 In considering s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act, Martin J.A. focussed primarily on the second test at p. 147:

I have reached the conclusion that s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act is constitutionally invalid because of the lack of a rational connection between the proved fact (possession) and the presumed fact (an intention to traffic) ... Mere possession of a small quantity of a narcotic drug does not support an inference of possession for the purpose of trafficking or even tend to prove an intent to traffic. Moreover, upon proof of possession, s. 8 casts upon the accused the burden of disproving not some formal element of the offence but the burden of disproving the very essence of the offence.

14 Martin J.A. added that it is not for courts to attempt to rewrite s. 8 by applying it on a case-by-case basis. Furthermore, where a rational connection does exist between possession and the presumed intention to traffic, such as [pp. 147-48]:

Where the possession of a narcotic drug is of such a nature as to be indicative of trafficking, the common sense of a jury can ordinarily be relied upon to arrive at a proper conclusion.

There would not, therefore, be any need for a statutory presumption.

15 One final note should be made regarding Martin J.A.'s judgment. In assessing whether or not s. 8 was a reasonable limitation on the constitutional protection of the presumption of innocence, Martin J.A. combined the analysis of s. 11(d) with s. 1. He held that the requirements of s. 1, that a limitation be reasonable and demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society, provided the standard for interpreting the phrase "according to law" in s.11(d).

IV. The Issues

16 The constitutional question in this appeal is stated as follows:

Is s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act inconsistent with s. 11(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and thus of no force and effect?

Two specific questions are raised by this general question: (1) Does s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act violate s. 11(d) of the Charter?; and (2) If it does, is s. 8 a reasonable limit prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society for the purpose of s. 1 of the Charter? If the answer to Q. 1 is affirmative and the answer to Q. 2 negative, then the constitutional question must be answered in the affirmative.

V. Does S. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act Violate S. 11(d) of the Charter?

(a) The Meaning of S. 8

18 Before examining the presumption of innocence contained in s.11(d) of the Charter, it is necessary to clarify the meaning of s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act. The procedural steps contemplated by s. 8 were clearly outlined by Branca J.A. in R. v. Babcock[1967] 2 C.C.C. 235 at 247B(C.C.A.):

(A) The accused is charged with possession of a forbidden drug for the purpose of trafficking.

(B) The trial of the accused on this charge then proceeds as if it was a prosecution against the accused on a simple charge of possession of the forbidden drug ...

(C) When the Crown has adduced its evidence on the basis that the charge was a prosecution for simple possession, the accused is then given the statutory right or opportunity of making a full answer and defence to the charge of simple possession ...

(D) When this has been done the Court must make a finding as to whether the accused was in possession of narcotics contrary to s. 3 of the new Act. (Unlawful possession of a forbidden narcotic drug).

(E) Assuming that the Court so finds, it is then that an onus is placed upon the accused in the sense that an opportunity must be given to the accused of establishing that he was not in possession of a narcotic for the purpose of trafficking.

(F) When the accused has been given this opportunity the prosecutor may then establish that the possession of the accused was for the purpose of trafficking ...

(G) It is then that the Court must find whether or not the accused has discharged the onus placed upon him under and by the said section.

(H) If the Court so finds, the accused must be acquitted of the offence as charged, namely, possession for the purpose of trafficking, but in that event the accused must be convicted of the simple charge of unlawful possession of a forbidden narcotic.

(I) If the accused does not so establish he must then be convicted of the full offence as charged.

Branca J.A. then added at pp. 247-48:

It is quite clear to me that under s. 8 of the new Act the trial must be divided into two phases. In the first phase the sole issue to be determined is whether or not the accused is guilty of simple possession of a narcotic. This issue is to be determined upon evidence relevant only to the issue of possession. In the second phase the question to be resolved is whether or not the possession charged is for the purpose of trafficking.

19 Against the backdrop of these procedural steps, we must consider the nature of the statutory presumption contained in s. 8 and the type of burden it places on an accused. The relevant portions of s. 8 read:

8. ... if the court finds that the accused was in possession of the narcotic ... he shall be given an opportunity of establishing that he was not in possession of the narcotic for the purpose of trafficking, ... if the accused fails to establish that he was not in possession of the narcotic for the purpose of trafficking, he shall be convicted of the offence as charged ...

20 In determining the meaning of these words, it is helpful to consider in a general sense the nature of presumptions. Presumptions can be classified into two general categories: presumptions without basic facts and presumptions with basic facts. A presumption without a basic fact is simply a conclusion which is to be drawn until the contrary is proved. A presumption with a basic fact entails a conclusion to be drawn upon proof of the basic fact: see Cross on Evidence, 5th ed. (1979), at pp. 122-23.

21 Basic fact presumptions can be further categorized into permissive and mandatory presumptions. A permissive presumption leaves it optional as to whether the inference of the presumed fact is drawn following proof of the basic fact. A mandatory presumption requires that the inference be made.

22 Presumptions may also be either rebuttable or irrebuttable. If a presumption is rebuttable, there are three potential ways the presumed fact can be rebutted. First, the accused may be required merely to raise a reasonable doubt as to its existence. Secondly, the accused may have an evidentiary burden to adduce sufficient evidence to bring into question the truth of the presumed fact. Thirdly, the accused may have a legal or persuasive burden to prove on a balance of probabilities the non-existence of the presumed fact.

23 Finally, presumptions are often referred to as either presumptions of law or presumptions of fact. The latter entail "frequently recurring examples of circumstantial evidence" (Cross on Evidence at p. 124), while the former involve actual legal rules.

24 To return to s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act, it is my view that, upon a finding beyond a reasonable doubt of possession of a narcotic, the accused has the legal burden of proving on a balance of probabilities that he or she was not in possession of the narcotic for the purpose of trafficking. Once the basic fact of possession is proven, a mandatory presumption of law arises against the accused that he or she had the intention to traffic. Moreover, the accused will be found guilty of the offence of trafficking unless he or she can rebut this presumption on a balance of probabilities. This interpretation of s. 8 is supported by the courts in a number of jurisdictions: R. v. Carroll (1983), 32 C.R. (3d) 235, 4 C.C.C. (3d) 131, 147 D.L.R. (3d) 92, 40 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 147, 115 A.P.R. 147 (P.E.I. C.A.); R. v. Cook (1983), 4 C.C.C. (3d) 419, 147 D.L.R. (3d) 687, 56 N.S.R. (2d) 449, 117 A.P.R. 449 (C.A.); R. v. O'Day (1983), 5 C.C.C. (3d) 227, 148 D.L.R. (3d) 371, 46 N.B.R. (2d) 77, 121 A.P.R. 77 (C.A.); R. v. Landry, [1983] Que. C.A. 408, 7 C.C.C. (3d) 555, 2 D.L.R. (4th) 518; R. v. Stanger, [1983] 5 W.W.R. 331, 26 Alta. L.R. (2d) 193, 7 C.C.C. (3d) 337, 2 D.L.R. (4th) 121, (sub nom. R. v. Bramwell; R. v. Kerr; R. v. Leskosek) 46 A.R. 241 (C.A.).

25 In some decisions it has been held that s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act is constitutional because it places only an evidentiary burden rather than a legal burden on the accused. The ultimate legal burden to prove guilt beyond a reasonable doubt remains with the Crown and the presumption of innocence is not offended: R. v. Therrien (1982), 67 C.C.C., (2d) 31 (Ont. Co. Ct.); R. v. Fraser (1982), 68 C.C.C. (2d) 433, 138 D.L.R. (3d) 488, 21 Sask. R. 227 (Q.B.); R. v. Kupczyniski, Ont. Co. Ct., 23rd June 1982 (unreported).

26 This same approach was relied on in R. v. Sharpe, [1961] O.W.N. 261, 35 C.R. 375, 131 C.C.C. 75 (C.A.), a Canadian Bill of Rights decision on the presumption of innocence. In that case, a provision in the Opium and Narcotic Drug Act, R.S.C. 1952, c. 201, similar to s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act, was interpreted as shifting merely the secondary burden of adducing evidence onto the accused. The primary onus remained with the Crown. In R. v. Silk, 9 C.R.N.S., 277, 71 W.W.R. 481, [1970] 3 C.C.C. (2d) 1, the British Columbia Court of Appeal held that s. 2(f) of the Canadian Bill of Rights had not been infringed because s. 33 [of the Food and Drugs Act, 1952-53 (Can.), c. 38] (now s. 35 of the Food and Drugs Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. F-27), required only that an accused raise a reasonable doubt that the purpose of his or her possession was trafficking. This decision, however, was not followed in R. v. Appleby, [1972] S.C.R. 303, 16 C.R.N.S. 35, [1971] 4 W.W.R. 601, 3 C.C.C. (2d) 354, 21 D.L.R. (3d) 325 [B.C.], or in R. v. Erdman (1971), 24 C.R.N.S., 216 (B.C.C.A.).

27 Those decisions which have held that only the secondary or evidentiary burden shifts are not persuasive with respect to the Narcotic Control Act. As Ritchie J. found in R. v. Appleby (though addressing a different statutory provision), the phrase "to establish" is the equivalent of "to prove". The legislature, by using the word "establish" in s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act, intended to impose a legal burden on the accused. This is most apparent in the words "if the accused fails to establish that he was not in possession of the narcotic for the purpose of trafficking, he shall be convicted of the offence as charged".

28 In the Appleby case, Ritchie J. also held that the accused is required to disprove the presumed fact according to the civil standard of proof, on a balance of probabilities. He rejected the criminal standard of beyond a reasonable doubt, relying, inter alia, upon the following passage from the House of Lords' decision in Pub. Prosecutor v. Yuvaraj, [1970] A.C. 913, [1970] 2 W.L.R. 226 at 232 (P.C.):

Generally speaking, no onus lies upon a defendant in criminal proceedings to prove or disprove any fact: it is sufficient for his acquittal if any of the facts which, if they existed, would constitute the offence with which he is charged are "not proved". But exceptionally, as in the present case, an enactment creating an offence expressly provides that if other facts are proved, a particular fact, the existence of which is a necessary factual ingredient of the offence, shall be presumed or deemed to exist "unless the contrary is proved". In such a case the consequence of finding that that particular fact is "disproved" will be an acquittal, whereas the absence of such a finding will have the consequence of a conviction. Where this is the consequence of a fact's being "disproved" there can be no grounds in public policy for requiring that exceptional degree of certainty as excludes all reasonable doubt that that fact does not exist. In their Lordships' opinion the general rule applies in such a case and it is sufficient if the court considers that upon the evidence before it it is more likely than not that the fact does not exist. The test is the same as that applied in civil proceedings: the balance of probabilities.

29 I conclude that s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act contains a reverse onus provision imposing a legal burden on an accused to prove on a balance of probabilities that he or she was not in possession of a narcotic for the purpose of trafficking. It is therefore necessary to determine whether s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act offends the right to be "presumed innocent until proven guilty" as guaranteed by s. 11(d) of the Charter.

(b) The Presumption of Innocence and S. 11(d) of the Charter

30 Section 11(d) of the Charter constitutionally entrenches the presumption of innocence as part of the supreme law of Canada. For ease of reference, I set out this provision again:

11. Any person charged with an offence has the right ...

(d) to be presumed innocent until proven guilty according to law in a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal ...

31 To interpret the meaning of s. 11(d), it is important to adopt a purposive approach. As this court stated in R. v. Big M Drug Mart Ltd. [1985] 1 S.C.R. 295 at 344 [1985] 3 W.W.R. 48137 Alta. L.R. (2d) 9785 C.L.L.C. 14,02318 C.C.C. (3d) 38518 D.L.R. (4th) 32113 C.R.R. 6460 A.R. 16158 N.R. 81:

The meaning of a right or freedom guaranteed by the Charter was to be ascertained by an analysis of the purpose of such a guarantee; it was to be understood, in other words, in the light of the interests it was meant to protect.

In my view this analysis is to be undertaken, and the purpose of the right or freedom in question is to be sought by reference to the character and the larger objects of the Charter itself, to the language chosen to articulate the specific right or freedom, to the historical origins of the concepts enshrined, and where applicable to the meaning and purpose of the other specific rights and freedoms.

To identify the underlying purpose of the Charter right in question, therefore, it is important to begin by understanding the cardinal values it embodies.

32 The presumption of innocence is a hallowed principle lying at the very heart of criminal law. Although protected expressly in s. 11(d) of the Charter, the presumption of innocence is referable and integral to the general protection of life, liberty and security of the person contained in s. 7 of the Charter: see S. 94(2) of Motor Vehicle Act, S.C.C. 17th December 1985 (unreported) [now reported [1985] 2 S.C.R. 486, 48 C.R. (3d) 289, (sub nom. Ref. re Constitutional Question Act) [1986] 1 W.W.R. 481, 69 B.C.L.R. 145, 36 M.V.R. 240, 63 N.R. 266], per Lamer J. The presumption of innocence protects the fundamental liberty and humandignity of any and every dignity of any and every person accused by the state of criminal conduct. An individual charged with a criminal offence faces grave social and personal consequences, including potential loss of physical liberty, subjection to social stigma and ostracism from the community, as well as other social, psychological and economic harms. In light of the gravity of these consequences, the presumption of innocence is crucial. It ensures that, until the state proves an accused's guilt beyond all reasonable doubt, he or she is innocent. This is essential in a society committed to fairness and social justice. The presumption of innocence confirms our faith in humankind; it reflects our belief that individuals are decent and law-abiding members of the community until proven otherwise.

33 The presumption of innocence has enjoyed long-standing recognition at common law. In the leading case, Woolmington v. D.P.P. [1935] A.C. 46225, Cr. App. R. 72(H.L.), Viscount Sankey L.C. wrote at pp. 481-82:

Throughout the web of the English Criminal Law one golden thread is always to be seen, that it is the duty of the prosecution to prove the prisoner's guilt subject to what I have already said as to the defence of insanity and subject also to any statutory exception. If, at the end of and on the whole of the case, there is a reasonable doubt, created by the evidence given by either the prosecution or the prisoner, as to whether the prisoner killed the deceased with a malicious intention, the prosecution has not made out the case and the prisoner is entitled to an acquittal. No matter what the charge or where the trial, the principle that the prosecution must prove the guilt of the prisoner is part of the common law of England and no attempt to whittle it down can be entertained.

Subsequent Canadian cases have cited the Woolmington principle with approval: see, for example, Manchuk v. R. [1938] S.C.R. 341 at 34970 C.C.C. 161 [1938] 3 D.L.R. 693 [Ont.]; R. v. Sault Ste. Marie [1978] 2 S.C.R. 1299 at 13163 C.R. (3d) 307 C.E.L.R. 5340 C.C.C. (2d) 35385 D.L.R. (3d) 16121 N.R. 295 [Ont.].

34 Further evidence of the widespread acceptance of the principle of the presumption of innocence is its inclusion in the major international human rights documents. Article 11(1) of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, adopted 10th December 1948 by the General Assembly of the United Nations, provides:

11. (1) Everyone charged with a penal offence has the right to be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law in a public trial at which he has had all the guarantees necessary for his defence.

In the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (1966), art.14(2) states:

(2) Everyone charged with a criminal offence shall have the right to be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law.

Canada acceded to this covenant, and the optional protocol which sets up machinery for implementing the covenant, on 19th May 1976. Both came into effect on 19th August 1976.

35 In light of the above, the right to be presumed innocent until proven guilty requires that s. 11\(d\) have, at a minimum, the following content. First, an individual must be proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. Second, it is the state which must bear the burden of proof. As Lamer J. stated in Dubois v. R., S.C.C., 21st November 1985 (unreported) [now reported [\[1985\] 2 S.C.R. 350, 48 C.R. \(3d\) 193](#) [1986] 1 W.W.R. 19341 Alta. L.R. (2d) 9722 C.C.C. (3d) 51366 A.R. 20262 N.R. 50], at p. 6 [p. 215 (C.R.)]:

Section 11\(d\) imposes upon the Crown the burden of proving the accused's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt as well as that of making out the case against the accused before he or she need respond, either by testifying or calling other evidence.

Third, criminal prosecutions must be carried out in accordance with lawful procedures and fairness. The latter part of s. 11\(d\), which requires the proof of guilt "according to law in a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal", underlines the importance of this procedural requirement.

(c) Authorities on Reverse Onus Provisions and the Presumption of Innocence

36 Having considered the general meaning of the presumption of innocence, it is now, I think, desirable to review briefly the authorities on reverse onus clauses in Canada and other jurisdictions.

(i) The Canadian Bill of Rights Jurisprudence

37 Section 2(f) of the Canadian Bill of Rights, which safeguards the presumption of innocence, provides:

2. Every law of Canada shall, unless it is expressly declared by an Act of the Parliament of Canada that it shall operate notwithstanding the Canadian Bill of Rights, be so construed and applied as not to abrogate, abridge or infringe or to authorize the abrogation, abridgment or infringement of any of the rights or freedoms herein recognized and declared, and in particular, no law of Canada shall be construed or applied so as to ...

(f) deprive a person charged with a criminal offence of the right to be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law in a fair and public hearing by an independent and impartial tribunal ...

The wording of this section closely parallels that of s. 11\(d\). For this reason, one of the Crown's primary contentions is that the Canadian Bill of Rights jurisprudence should be determinative of the outcome of the present appeal.

38 The leading case decided under s. 2(f) of the Canadian Bill of Rights and relied on by the Crown is R. v. Appleby, supra. In that case, the accused had challenged s. 224A(1)(a) [of the Criminal Code, 1953–54 (Can.), c. 51] (now s. 237(1)(a) of the Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1970, c. C-34), which imposes a burden upon an accused to prove that he or she, though occupying the driver's seat, did not enter the vehicle for the purpose of setting it in motion and did not, therefore, have care and control. This court rejected the arguments of the accused that s. 2(f) had been violated; it relied on the Woolmington case, supra, which held that the presumption of innocence was subject to "statutory exceptions". As Ritchie J. stated in his judgment for the majority at pp. 315–16:

It seems to me, therefore, that if Woolmington's case is to be accepted, the words "presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law ..." as they appear in s. 2(f) of the Bill of Rights, must be taken to envisage a law which recognizes the existence of statutory exceptions reversing the onus of proof with respect to one or more ingredients of an offence in cases where certain specific facts have been proved by the Crown in relation to such ingredients.

39 In a concurring opinion, Laskin J. put forward an alternative test. He chose not to follow Ritchie J.'s approach of reading a statutory exception limitation into the phrase "according to law" in s. 2(f) of the Canadian Bill of Rights, and said at p. 317:

I do not construe s. 2(f) as self-defeating because of the phrase "according to law" which appears therein. Hence, it would be offensive to s. 2(f) for a federal criminal enactment to place upon the accused the ultimate burden of establishing his innocence with respect to any element of the offence charged. The "right to be presumed innocent", of which s. 2(f) speaks, is, in popular terms, a way of expressing the fact that the Crown has the ultimate burden of establishing guilt; if there is any reasonable doubt at the conclusion of the case on any element of the offence charged, an accused person must be acquitted. In a more refined sense, the presumption of innocence gives an accused the initial benefit of a right of silence and the ultimate benefit (after the Crown's evidence is in and as well any evidence tendered on behalf of the accused) of any reasonable doubt: see Coffin v. U.S. (1895), 156 U.S. 432 at 452.

Nevertheless, Laskin J. went on to hold (at p. 318) that the presumption of innocence is not violated by "any statutory or non-statutory burden upon an accused to adduce evidence to neutralize, or counter on a balance of probabilities, the effect of evidence presented by the Crown". The test, according to Laskin J., is whether the legislative provision calls for a finding of guilt even though there is a reasonable doubt as to the culpability of the accused. This would seem to prohibit the imposition of any legal burden on the accused; however, Laskin J. upheld a statutory provision which would appear to have done precisely that.

40 In a subsequent case, R. v. Shelley, supra, involving a reverse onus provision regarding unlawful importation, Laskin C.J.C. discussed further the views he had articulated in Appleby, supra, at p. 200:

This Court held in R. v. Appleby that a reverse onus provision, which goes no farther than to require an accused to offer proof on a balance of probabilities, does not necessarily violate the presumption of innocence under s. 2(f). It would of course, be clearly incompatible with s. 2(f) for a statute to put upon an accused a reverse onus of proving a fact in issue beyond a reasonable doubt. In so far as the onus goes no farther than to require an accused to prove an essential fact upon a balance of probabilities, the essential fact must be one which is rationally open to the accused to prove or disprove, as the case may be. If it is one which an accused cannot reasonably be expected to prove, being beyond his knowledge or beyond what he may reasonably be expected to know, it amounts to a requirement that is impossible to meet.

In addition, Laskin C.J.C. sowed the seeds for the development of a "rational connection test" for determining the validity of a reverse onus provision when he stated at p. 202:

It is evident to me in this case that there is on the record no rational or necessary connection between the fact proved, i.e. possession of goods of foreign origin, and the conclusion of unlawful importation which the accused under s. 248(1) must, to avoid conviction, disprove.

41 Although there are important lessons to be learned from the Canadian Bill of Rights jurisprudence, it does not constitute binding authority in relation to the constitutional interpretation of the Charter. As this court held in R. v. Big M Drug Mart Ltd., supra, the Charter, as a constitutional document, is fundamentally different from the statutory Canadian Bill of Rights, which was interpreted as simply recognizing and declaring existing rights: see also Singh v. Min. of Employment & Immigration; Thandi v. Min. of Employment & Immigration; Mann v. Min. of Employment & Immigration [1985] 1 S.C.R. 17712 Admin. L.R. 13714 C.R.R. 1317 D.L.R. (4th) 42258 N.R. 1 [Fed.], per Wilson J.; R. v. Therens, [1985] 1 S.C.R. 613, 45 C.R. (3d) 97, [1985] 4 W.W.R. 286, 38 Alta. L.R. (2d) 99, 32 M.V.R. 153, 13 C.R.R. 193, 18 C.C.C. (3d) 481, 18 D.L.R. (4th) 655, 40 Sask. R. 122, 59 N.R. 122 [Sask.], per Le Dain J. In rejecting the Canadian Bill of Rights religion cases as determinative of the meaning of freedom of religion under the Charter in Big M Drug Mart, supra, the court had occasion to say at pp. 343–44 [S.C.R.]:

I agree with the submission of the respondent that the Charter is intended to set a standard upon which present as well as future legislation is to be tested. Therefore the meaning of the concept of freedom of conscience and religion is not to be determined solely by the degree to which that right was enjoyed by Canadians prior to the proclamation of the Charter. For this reason, Robertson and Rosetanni, supra, cannot be determinative of the meaning of "freedom of conscience and religion" under the Charter. We must look rather to the distinctive principles of constitutional interpretation appropriate to expounding the supreme law of Canada.

42 With this in mind, one cannot but question the appropriateness of reading into the phrase "according to law" in s. 11(d) of the Charter the statutory exceptions acknowledged in Woolmington, supra, and in Appleby, supra. The Woolmington case was decided in the context of a legal system with no constitutionally-entrenched human rights document. In Canada, we have tempered Parliamentary supremacy by entrenching important rights and freedoms in the Constitution. Viscount Sankey L.C.'s statutory exception proviso is clearly not applicable in this context and would subvert the very purpose of the entrenchment of the presumption of innocence in the Charter. I do not, therefore, feel constrained in this case by the interpretation of s. 2(f) of the Canadian Bill of Rights presented in the majority judgment in Appleby. Section 8 of the Narcotic Control Act is not rendered constitutionally valid simply by virtue of the fact that it is a statutory provision.

(ii) Canadian Charter Jurisprudence

43 In addition to the present case, there have been a number of other provincial appellate level judgments addressing the meaning of the presumption of innocence contained in s. 11(d). This jurisprudence provides a comprehensive and persuasive source of insight into the questions raised in this appeal. In particular, six appellate level courts in addition to the Ontario Court of Appeal have held that s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act violates the Charter: R. v. Carroll, supra; R. v. Cook, supra; R. v. O'Day, supra; R. v. Stanger, supra; R. v. Landry, supra; and R. v. Stock (1983), 10 C.C.C., (3d) 319 (B.C.C.A.).

44 Following the decision of the Ontario Court of Appeal in the present case, the Prince Edward Island Supreme Court (in banc) rendered its decision in R. v. Carroll. Writing for the majority, MacDonald J. held at p. 105:

Unless a provision falls within s. 1 of the Charter, there cannot be a requirement that an accused must prove an essential positive element of the Crown's case other than by raising a reasonable doubt. The presumption of innocence cannot be said to exist if by shifting the persuasive burden the court is required to convict even if a reasonable doubt may be said to exist.

In a concurring judgment, Mitchell J. commented at pp. 107-108:

Section 11(d) gives an accused person the right to be presumed innocent until proven guilty. It follows that, if an accused is to be presumed innocent until proven guilty, he must not be convicted unless and until the Crown has proven each and all of the elements necessary to constitute the crime.

Applying these legal conclusions to s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act, the court held that s. 11(d) had been violated. As Mitchell J. stated at p. 108:

Under s. 8 an accused is not presumed innocent until proven guilty. He is only presumed innocent until found in possession. Once the Crown proves the accused had possession of the narcotic, he is presumed to be guilty of an intention to traffic until he proves otherwise.

45 The Nova Scotia Supreme Court, Appellate Division, also concluded that s.8 is an unconstitutional violation of the s. 11(d) presumption of innocence, in its decision in R. v. Cook, supra. After reviewing R. v. Oakes and R. v. Carroll, supra, Hart J.A. concluded at pp. 435-36:

Section 8 of the Narcotic Control Act is a piece of legislation that attempts to relieve the Crown of its normal burden of proof by use of what is known as a reverse onus. Different types of reverse onus have been known to the law and proof of a case with the aid of a reverse onus can in my opinion, fall into the wording of s. 11(d) of the Charter as being proof "according to law" ... I know of no justification, however, for holding that it would be "according to law" to allow use of a reverse onus clause which permitted the Crown the assistance of a provision which relieved it from calling any probative evidence to establish one of the essential elements of an offence.

Although concurring in the result, Jones J.A. maintained that the reasonableness test should be applied with respect to s. 1 and not with respect to the words "according to law" in s. 11(d). At p. 439:

The test of reasonableness should be available in considering the secondary question under s. 1 of the Charter. It is important that the burden of proof should be on the Crown to show that a statute which violates s. 11(d) of the Charter is demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

46 In R. v. O'Day, supra, the New Brunswick Court of Appeal struck down s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act and registered its agreement with the three earlier provincial appellate level courts.

47 The Alberta Court of Appeal in R. v. Stanger, supra, also found s.8 unconstitutional; however, the court was not unanimous in this conclusion. On the meaning of s. 11(d), Stevenson J.A., writing for the majority, paraphrased Martin J.A.'s comment in Oakes and stated at p. 351 [C.C.C.] that the presumption of innocence meant "first, that an accused is innocent until proven guilty in accordance with established procedure, and secondly, that guilt must be proven beyond a reasonable doubt". Stevenson J.A. also cited MacDonald J.'s comment in Carroll, supra, at p. 98, that the presumption of innocence is maintained "as long as the prosecution has the final burden of establishing guilt, on any element of the offence charged, beyond a reasonable doubt".

48 I should add that the majority in Stanger correctly rejected the applicability of the Privy Council decision in Ong Ah Chuan v. Pub. Prosecutor; Koh Chai Cheng v. Pub. Prosecutor[1981] A.C. 648. That case concerned constitutional provisions of Singapore which are significantly different from those of the Charter; in particular, they do not contain an explicit endorsement of the presumption of innocence. Moreover, the Privy Council did not read this principle into the general due process protections of the constitution of Singapore.

49 In R. v. Landry, supra, the Quebec Court of Appeal invalidated s.8 of the Narcotic Control Act and extended its conclusions to s. 2(f) of the Canadian Bill of Rights. As Malouf J.A. stated at p. 561:

Both the Bill of Rights and the Charter recognize the right of an accused to be presumed innocent until proven guilty according to law. I cannot accept that such a basic and fundamental principle can be set aside by such a reverse onus provision.

50 Finally, in a very brief judgment, R. v. Stock, supra, the British Columbia Court of Appeal concurred with the Court of Appeal decisions reviewed above, endorsing in particular the Ontario Court of Appeal decision in Oakes. An earlier British Columbia Court of Appeal opinion, *R.v. Anson*35 C.R. (3d) 179[1983] 3 W.W.R. 36642 B.C.L.R. 2824 C.C.C. (3d) 114146 D.L.R. (3d) 661(sub nom.Anson v. A.G. Can.) 4 C.R.R. 337, had dismissed an appeal from a ruling which had upheld the constitutionality of s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act; however, the basis for the denial of the appeal was procedural. The court did not assess the constitutionality of s. 8 in relation to the presumption of innocence.

51 There have also been a number of cases in which the meaning of s.11(d) has been considered in relation to other legislative provisions: see, for example, R. v. Holmes (1983), 41 O.R. (2d) 250, 32 C.R. (3d) 3224 C.C.C. (3d) 440145 D.L.R. (3d) 6894 C.R.R. 222(C.A.); R. v. Whyte (1983), 38 C.R. (3d) 24, 25 M.V.R. 22, 10 C.C.C. (3d) 277, 6 D.L.R. (4th) 263, leave to appeal to S.C.C. granted 43 C.R. (3d) xxvii, 10 C.C.C. (3d) 277n, 6 D.L.R. (4th) 263n [B.C.]; R. v. Lee's Poultry Ltd. 198543 C.R. (3d) 28917 C.C.C. (3d) 53912 C.R.R. 1257 O.A.C. 100(C.A.); R. v. S.P.T. 198543 C.R. (3d) 30733 M.V.R. 14818 C.C.C. (3d) 12516 D.L.R. (4th) 75366 N.S.R. (2d) 311152 A.P.R. 311(C.A.); R. v. Kowalcuk [1983] 3 W.W.R. 6945 C.C.C. (3d) 25147 D.L.R. (3d) 73520 Man. R. (2d) 379(C.A.); R. v. Schwartz 198310 C.C.C. (3d) 345 D.L.R. (4th) 52425 Man. R. (2d) 295(C.A.); Re Boyle and R. 198341 O.R. (2d) 71335 C.R. (3d) 345 C.C.C. (3d) 193148 D.L.R. (3d) 449(C.A.).

52 To summarize, the Canadian Charter jurisprudence on the presumption of innocence in s. 11\(d\) and reverse onus provisions appears to have solidly accorded a high degree of protection to the presumption of innocence. Any infringements of this right are permissible only when, in the words of s. 1 of the Charter, they are reasonable and demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

(iii) United States Jurisprudence

53 In the United States, protection of the presumption of innocence is not explicit. Rather, it has been read into the "due process" provisions contained in the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments of the American Bill of Rights. An extensive review of the United States case law is provided in Martin J.A.'s judgment for the Ontario Court of Appeal. I will therefore merely highlight the major jurisprudential developments.

54 In Tot v. U.S.; U.S. v. Delia 319 U.S. 463 87 L. Ed. 151963 S.Ct. 1241 (1943), Roberts J. outlined the following test at pp. 467–68:

... a statutory presumption cannot be sustained if there be no rational connection between the fact proved and the ultimate fact presumed, if the inference of the one from proof of the other is arbitrary because of lack of connection between the two in common experience.

The comparative convenience of producing evidence was also acknowledged as a corollary test. The case involved a presumption to be drawn, from the possession of firearms by a person convicted of a previous crime of violence, that the firearms were illegally obtained through interstate or foreign commerce. Of note was Roberts J.'s comment that, even if a rational connection had been proved, the statutory presumption could not be sustained because of the prejudicial reliance on a past conviction as part of the basic fact. The accused would be discredited in the eyes of the jury even before he attempted to disprove the presumed fact.

55 In Leary v. U.S. 395 U.S. 623 L. Ed. 2d 5789 S. Ct. 1532 (1969), Harlan J. articulated a more stringent test for invalidity at p. 36:

... a criminal statutory presumption must be regarded as "irrational" or "arbitrary," and hence unconstitutional, unless it can at least be said with substantial assurance that the presumed fact is more likely than not to flow from the proved fact on which it is made to depend.

Harlan J. also noted [at p. 36, note 64] that, since the statutory presumption was invalid under the above test:

... we need not reach the question whether a criminal presumption which passes muster when so judged must also satisfy the criminal "reasonable doubt" standard if proof of the crime charged or an essential element thereof depends upon its use.

56 The United States Supreme Court did answer this question in Co. Ct. of Ulster v. Allen, 442 U.S. 140, 60 L. Ed. 2d 777, 99 S. Ct. 2213 (1979). It held that, where a mandatory criminal presumption was imposed by statute, the state may not "rest its case entirely on a presumption unless the fact proved is sufficient to support the inference of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt" (p. 167). A mere rational connection is insufficient. This case illustrates the high degree of constitutional protection accorded the principle that an accused must be found guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. The rationale for this is well stated by Brennan J. in Re Winship, 397 U.S. 358 at 363–64, 25 L. Ed. 2d 368, 90 S. Ct. 1068 (1970):

The requirement of proof beyond a reasonable doubt has this vital role in our criminal procedure for cogent reasons. The accused during a criminal prosecution has at stake interests of immense importance, both because of the possibility that he may lose his liberty upon conviction and because of the certainty that he would be stigmatized by the conviction. Accordingly, a society that values the good name and freedom of every individual should not condemn a man for commission of a crime when there is reasonable doubt about his guilt.

(iv) European Convention on Human Rights Jurisprudence

57 As mentioned above, international developments in human rights law have afforded protection to the principle of the presumption of innocence. The jurisprudence on the European Convention on Human Rights includes a consideration of the legitimacy of reverse onus provisions. Article 6(2) of the European Convention on Human Rights reads:

(2) Everyone charged with a criminal offence shall be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law.

The meaning of art. 6(2) was clarified in the Pfunders Case (Austria v. Italy) (1963), 6 Yearbook of E.C.H.R. 740 at 782 and 784:

This text, according to which everyone charged with a criminal offence shall be presumed innocent until proved guilty according to law, requires firstly that court judges in fulfilling their duties should not start with the conviction or assumption that the accused committed the act with which he is charged. In other words, the onus to prove guilt falls upon the Prosecution, and any doubt is to the benefit of the accused. Moreover, the judges must permit the latter to produce evidence in rebuttal. In their judgment they can find him guilty only on the basis of direct or indirect evidence sufficiently strong in the eyes of the law to establish his guilt.

58 Although the commission has endorsed the general importance of the requirement that the prosecution prove the accused's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt, it has acknowledged the permissibility of certain exceptions to this principle. For example, the commission upheld a statutory reverse onus provision in which a man living with or habitually in the company of a prostitute is presumed to be knowingly living on the earnings of prostitution unless he proves otherwise: X v. U.K., Application 5124/71, Collection of Decisions of E.C.H.R. 135. The commission noted the importance of examining the substance and effect of a statutory reverse onus. It concluded, however, at p. 135:

The statutory presumption in the present case is restrictively worded ... The presumption is neither irrebuttable nor unreasonable. To oblige the prosecution to obtain direct evidence of "living on immoral earnings" would in most cases make its task impossible.

See discussion in Francis Jacobs, The European Convention on Human Rights (Oxford, 1975), pp. 113-14.

(d) Conclusion regarding S. 11(d) of Charter and S. 8 of Narcotic Control Act

59 This review of the authorities lays the groundwork for formulating some general conclusions regarding reverse onus provisions and the presumption of innocence in s. 11(d). We can then proceed to apply these principles to the particulars of s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act.

60 In general one must, I think, conclude that a provision which requires an accused to disprove on a balance of probabilities the existence of a presumed fact which is an important element of the offence in question violates the presumption of innocence in s. 11(d). If an accused bears the burden of disproving on a balance of probabilities an essential element of an offence, it would be possible for a conviction to occur despite the existence of a reasonable doubt. This would arise if the accused adduced sufficient evidence to raise a reasonable doubt as to his or her innocence but did not convince the jury on a balance of probabilities that the presumed fact was untrue.

61 The fact that the standard is only the civil one does not render a reverse onus clause constitutional. As Sir Rupert Cross commented in the Rede lecture "The Golden Thread of the English Criminal Law: The Burden of Proof", delivered in 1976 at the University of Toronto, at p. 11:

It is sometimes said that exceptions to the Woolmington rule are acceptable because, whenever the burden of proof on any issue in a criminal case is borne by the accused, he only has to satisfy the jury on the balance of probabilities, whereas on issues on which the Crown bears the burden of proof the jury must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt.

And at p. 13:

The fact that the standard is lower when the accused bears the burden of proof than it is when the burden of proof is borne by the prosecution is no answer to my objection to the existence of exceptions to the Woolmington rule as it does not alter the fact that a jury or bench of magistrates may have to convict the accused although they are far from sure of his guilt.

62 As we have seen, the potential for a rational connection between the basic fact and the presumed fact to justify a reverse onus provision has been elaborated in some of the cases discussed above and is now known as the "rational connection test". In the context of s. 11(d), however, the following question arises: if we apply the rational connection test to the consideration of whether s. 11(d) has been violated, are we adequately protecting the constitutional principle of the presumption of innocence? As Professors MacKay and Cromwell point out in their article "Oakes: A Bold Initiative Impeded by Old Ghosts" (1983), 32 C.R. (3d) 221, at p. 233:

The rational connection test approves a provision that forces the trier to infer a fact that may be simply rationally connected to the proved fact. Why does it follow that such a provision does not offend the constitutional right to be proved guilty beyond a reasonable doubt?

A basic fact may rationally tend to prove a presumed fact, but not prove its existence beyond a reasonable doubt. An accused person could thereby be convicted despite the presence of a reasonable doubt. This would violate the presumption of innocence.

63 I should add that this questioning of the constitutionality of the "rational connection test" as a guide to interpreting s.11(d) does not minimize its importance. The appropriate stage for invoking the rational connection test, however, is under s. 1 of the Charter. This consideration did not arise under the Canadian Bill of Rights because of the absence of an equivalent to s. 1. At the Court of Appeal level in the present case, Martin J.A. sought to combine the analysis of s. 11(d) and s. 1 to overcome the limitations of the Canadian Bill of Rights jurisprudence. To my mind, it is highly desirable to keep s. 1 and s.11(d) analytically distinct. Separating the analysis into two components is consistent with the approach this court has taken to the Charter to date: see R. v. Big M Drug Mart Ltd., supra; Hunter v. Southam Inc., [1984] 2 S.C.R. 145, (sub nom. Dir. of Investigation & Research, Combines Investigation Branch v. Southam Inc.) 41 C.R. (3d) 97, [1984] 6 W.W.R. 577, 33 Alta. L.R. (2d) 193, 27 B.L.R. 297, 84 D.T.C. 6467, 14 C.C.C. (3d) 97, 11 D.L.R. (4th) 641, 2 C.P.R. (3d) 1, 9 C.R.R. 355, 55 A.R. 291, 55 N.R. 241; L.S.U.C. v. Skapinker, [1984] 1 S.C.R. 357, 11 C.C.C. (3d) 4819 D.L.R. (4th) 161, 8 C.R.R. 193, 3 O.A.C. 321, 53 N.R. 169.

64 To return to s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act, I am in no doubt whatsoever that it violates s. 11(d) of the Charter by requiring the accused to prove on a balance of probabilities that he was not in possession of the narcotic for the purpose of trafficking. Mr. Oakes is compelled by s.8 to prove that he is not guilty of the offence of trafficking. He is thus denied his right to be presumed innocent and subjected to the potential penalty of life imprisonment unless he can rebut the presumption. This is radically and fundamentally inconsistent with the societal values of human dignity and liberty which we espouse, and is directly contrary to the presumption of innocence enshrined in s. 11(d). Let us turn now to s.1 of the Charter.

V. Is S. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act a Reasonable and Demonstrably Justified Limit Pursuant to S. 1 of the Charter?

65 The Crown submits that, even if s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act violates s. 11(d) of the Charter, it can still be upheld as a reasonable limit under s. 1, which, as has been mentioned, provides:

1. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in it subject only to such reasonable limits prescribed by law as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

The question whether the limit is "prescribed by law" is not contentious in the present case, since s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act is a duly-enacted legislative provision. It is, however, necessary to determine if the limit on Mr. Oakes' right, as guaranteed by s. 11(d) of the Charter, is "reasonable" and "demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society" for the purpose of s. 1 of the Charter, and thereby saved from inconsistency with the Constitution.

66 It is important to observe at the outset that s. 1 has two functions: first, it constitutionally guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in the provisions which follow; and second, it states explicitly the exclusive justificatory criteria (outside of s. 33 of the Constitution Act, 1982) against which limitations on those rights and freedoms must be measured. Accordingly, any s. 1 inquiry must be premised on an understanding that the impugned limit violates constitutional rights and freedoms — rights and freedoms which are part of the supreme law of Canada. As Wilson J. stated in Singh v. Min. of Employment & Immigration, supra, at p. 218:

... it is important to remember that the courts are conducting this inquiry in light of a commitment to uphold the rights and freedoms set out in the other sections of the Charter.

67 A second contextual element of interpretation of s. 1 is provided by the words "free and democratic society". Inclusion of these words as the final standard of justification for limits on rights and freedoms refers the court to the very purpose for which the Charter was originally entrenched in the Constitution: Canadian society is to be free and democratic. The court must be guided by the values and principles essential to a free and democratic society, which I believe embody, to name but a few, respect for the inherent dignity of the human person, commitment to social justice and equality, accommodation of a wide variety of beliefs, respect for cultural and group identity, and faith in social and political institutions which enhance the participation of individuals and groups in society. The underlying values and principles of a free and democratic society are the genesis of the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Charter and the ultimate standard against which a limit on a right or freedom must be shown, despite its effect, to be reasonable and demonstrably justified.

68 The rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Charter are not, however, absolute. It may become necessary to limit rights and freedoms in circumstances where their exercise would be inimical to the realization of collective goals of fundamental importance. For this reason, s. 1 provides criteria of justification for limits on the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Charter.

69 These criteria impose a stringent standard of justification, especially when understood in terms of the two contextual considerations discussed above, namely, the violation of a constitutionally-guaranteed right or freedom and the fundamental principles of a free and democratic society.

70 The onus of proving that a limit on a right or freedom guaranteed by the Charter is reasonable and demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society rests upon the party seeking to uphold the limitation. It is clear from the text of s. 1 that limits on the rights and freedoms enumerated in the Charter are exceptions to their general guarantee. The presumption is that the rights and freedoms are guaranteed unless the party invoking s. 1 can bring itself within the exceptional criteria which justify their being limited. This is further substantiated by the use of the word "demonstrably", which clearly indicates that the onus of justification is on the party seeking to limit: Hunter v. Southam Inc., supra.

71 The standard of proof under s. 1 is the civil standard, namely, proof by a preponderance of probability. The alternative criminal standard, proof beyond a reasonable doubt, would, in my view, be unduly onerous on the party seeking to limit. Concepts such as "reasonableness", "justifiability" and "free and democratic society" are simply not amenable to such a standard. Nevertheless, the preponderance of probability test must be applied rigorously. Indeed, the phrase "demonstrably justified" in s. 1 of the Charter supports this conclusion. Within the broad category of the civil standard, there exist different degrees of probability depending on the nature of the case: see Sopinka and Lederman, The Law of Evidence in Civil Cases (Toronto, 1974), at p. 385. As Denning L.J. explained in Bater v. Bater [1951] P. 35 [1950] 2 All E.R. 458 at 459 (C.A.):

The case may be proved by a preponderance of probability, but there may be degrees of probability within that standard. The degree depends on the subject-matter. A civil court, when considering a charge of fraud, will naturally require a higher degree of probability than that which it would require if considering whether negligence were established. It does not adopt so high a standard as a criminal court, even when considering a charge of a criminal nature, but still it does require a degree of probability which is commensurate with the occasion.

This passage was cited with approval in Hanes v. Wawanesa Mut. Ins. Co., [1963] S.C.R. 154 at 161, [1963] 1 C.C.C. 321, 36 D.L.R. (2d) 718 [Ont.]. A similar approach was put forward by Cartwright J. in Smith v. Smith, [1952] 2 S.C.R. 312 at 331-32, [1952] 3 D.L.R. 449 [B.C.]:

I wish, however, to emphasize that in every civil action before the tribunal can safely find the affirmative of an issue of fact required to be proved it must be satisfied, and that whether or not it will be so satisfied must depend on the totality of the circumstances on which its judgment is formed including the gravity of the consequences ...

72 Having regard to the fact that s. 1 is being invoked for the purpose of justifying a violation of the constitutional rights and freedoms the Charter was designed to protect, a very high degree of probability will be, in the words of Denning L.J., "commensurate with the occasion". Where evidence is required in order to prove the constituent elements of a s. 1 inquiry, and this will generally be the case, it should be cogent and persuasive and make clear to the court the consequences of imposing or not imposing the limit: see L.S.U.C. v. Skapinker, supra, at p. 384; Singh v. Min. of Employment & Immigration, supra, at p. 217. A court will also need to know what alternative measures for implementing the objective were available to the legislators when they made their decisions. I should add, however, that there may be cases where certain elements of the s. 1 analysis are obvious or self-evident.

73 To establish that a limit is reasonable and demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society, two central criteria must be satisfied. First, the objective, which the measures responsible for a limit on a Charter right or freedom are designed to serve, must be "of sufficient importance to warrant overriding a constitutionally protected right or freedom": R. v. Big M Drug Mart Ltd., supra, at p. 352. The standard must be high in order to ensure that objectives which are trivial or discordant with the principles integral to a free and democratic society do not gain s. 1 protection. It is necessary, at a minimum, that an objective relate to concerns which are pressing and substantial in a free and democratic society before it can be characterized as sufficiently important.

74 Second, once a sufficiently significant objective is recognized, then the party invoking s. 1 must show that the means chosen are reasonable and demonstrably justified. This involves "a form of proportionality test": R. v. Big M Drug Mart Ltd., supra, at p. 352. Although the nature of the proportionality test will vary depending on the circumstances, in each case courts will be required to balance the interests of society with those of individuals and groups. There are, in my view, three important components of a proportionality test. First, the measures adopted must be carefully designed to achieve the objective in question. They must not be arbitrary, unfair or based on irrational considerations. In short, they must be rationally connected to the objective. Second, the means, even if rationally connected to the objective in this first sense, should impair "as little as possible" the right or freedom in question: R. v. Big M Drug Mart Ltd., supra, at p. 352. Third, there must be a proportionality between the effects of the measures which are responsible for limiting the Charter right or freedom and the objective which has been identified as of "sufficient importance".

75 With respect to the third component, it is clear that the general effect of any measure impugned under s. 1 will be the infringement of a right or freedom guaranteed by the Charter; this is the reason why resort to s. 1 is necessary. The inquiry into effects must, however, go further. A wide range of rights and freedoms are guaranteed by the Charter, and an almost infinite number of factual situations may arise in respect of these. Some limits on rights and freedoms protected by the Charter will be more serious than others in terms of the nature of the right or freedom violated, the extent of the violation, and the degree to which the measures which impose the limit trench upon the integral principles of a free and democratic society. Even if an objective is of sufficient importance, and the first two elements of the proportionality test are satisfied, it is still possible that, because of the severity of the deleterious effects of a measure on individuals or groups, the measure will not be justified by the purposes it is intended to serve. The more severe the deleterious effects of a measure, the more important the objective must be if the measure is to be reasonable and demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society.

76 Having outlined the general principles of a s. 1 inquiry, we must apply them to s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act. Is the reverse onus provision in s. 8 a reasonable limit on the right to be presumed innocent until proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt as can be demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society?

77 The starting point for formulating a response to this question is, as stated above, the nature of Parliament's interest or objective which accounts for the passage of s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act. According to the Crown, s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act is aimed at curbing drug trafficking by facilitating the conviction of drug traffickers. In my opinion, Parliament's concern that drug trafficking be decreased can be characterized as substantial and pressing. The problem of drug trafficking has been increasing since the 1950s, at which time there was already considerable concern: see Report of the Special Committee on Traffic in Narcotic Drugs, Appendix to Debates of the Senate of Canada, session of 1955, pp. 690-700; see also Final Report, Commission of Inquiry into the Non-Medical Use of Drugs (Ottawa, 1973). Throughout this period, numerous measures were adopted by free and democratic societies, at both the international and national levels.

78 At the international level, on 23rd June 1953, the Protocol for Limiting and Regulating the Cultivation of the Poppy Plant, the Production of, International and Wholesale Trade in, and Use of Opium, to which Canada is a signatory, was adopted by the United Nations Opium Conference held in New York. The Single Convention on Narcotic Drugs (1961), was acceded to in New York on 30th March 1961. This treaty was signed by Canada on 30th March 1961. It entered into force on 13th December 1964. As stated in the preamble, "addiction to narcotic drugs constitutes a serious evil for the individual and is fraught with social and economic danger to mankind".

79 At the national level, statutory provisions have been enacted by numerous countries which, inter alia, attempt to deter drug trafficking by imposing criminal sanctions: see, for example, Misuse of Drugs Act, 1975 (New Zealand), no. 116; Misuse of Drugs Act, 1971 (Eng.), c. 38.

80 The objective of protecting our society from the grave ills associated with drug trafficking is, in my view, one of sufficient importance to warrant overriding a constitutionally-protected right or freedom in certain cases. Moreover, the degree of seriousness of drug trafficking makes its acknowledgement as a sufficiently important objective for the purposes of s.1 to a large extent self-evident. The first criterion of a s. 1 inquiry, therefore, has been satisfied by the Crown.

81 The next stage of inquiry is a consideration of the means chosen by Parliament to achieve its objective. The means must be reasonable and demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society. As outlined above, this proportionality test should begin with a consideration of the rationality of the provision: Is the reverse onus clause in s. 8 rationally related to the objective of curbing drug trafficking? At a minimum, this requires that s. 8 be internally rational; there must be a rational connection between the basic fact of possession and the presumed fact of possession for the purpose of trafficking. Otherwise the reverse onus clause could give rise to unjustified and erroneous convictions for drug trafficking of persons guilty only of possession of narcotics.

82 In my view, s. 8 does not survive this rational connection test. As Martin J.A. of the Ontario Court of Appeal concluded, possession of a small or negligible quantity of narcotics does not support the inference of trafficking. In other words, it would be irrational to infer that a person had an intent to traffic on the basis of his or her possession of a very small quantity of narcotics. The presumption required under s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act is overinclusive and could lead to results in certain cases which would defy both rationality and fairness. In light of the seriousness of the offence in question, which carries with it the possibility of imprisonment for life, I am further convinced that the first component of the proportionality test has not been satisfied by the Crown.

83 As I have concluded that s. 8 does not satisfy this first component of proportionality, it is unnecessary to consider the other two components.

VI. Conclusion

84 The Ontario Court of Appeal was correct in holding that s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act violates the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and is therefore of no force or effect. Section 8 imposes a limit on the right guaranteed by s. 11\(d\) of the Charter which is not reasonable and is not demonstrably justified in a free and democratic society for the purpose of s. 1. Accordingly, the constitutional question is answered as follows:

Question:

85 Is s. 8 of the Narcotic Control Act inconsistent with s. 11(d) of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and thus of no force and effect?

Answer:

86 Yes.

87 I would therefore dismiss the appeal.

Estey J. (McIntyre J. concurring):

88 I would dismiss this appeal [from 40 O.R. (2d) 660, 32 C.R. (3d) 193, 2 C.C.C. (3d) 339, 145 D.L.R. (3d) 123, affirming 38 O.R. (2d) 598]. I agree with the conclusions of the Chief Justice with reference to the relationship between s. 11(d) and s. 1 of the Charter of Rights. For the disposition of all other issues arising in this appeal, I would adopt the reasons given by Martin J.A. in the court below.

Appeal dismissed.
